SEE HOPE FOR SETTLEMENT OF MINE STRIKE

Overnight Developments Aid Outlook in Hocking Valley Dispute.

CONCESSIONS ARE MADE

Both Sides "Give a Point" in Effort To Return Men to Work.

By The Associated Press

COLUMBUS, O., March 26—Early settlement of the Hocking Valley coal strike involving some 7,000 men appeared possible today as a result of two overnight developments.

Brigadier General Ludwig S. Connelly, commanding the Ohio National guard observers in the strike zone, opened the way for settlement when he suggested a six months truce and obtained from the miners a promise to withdraw pickets from one mine.

A scale committee representing the miners who walked out Feb. 1, met with General Connelly and agreed to withdraw pickets from the No. 6 mine of the Sunday Creek Coal company at Millfield on the company's promise that 72-hour notice would precede any attempts to reopen the pits.

Bars Outside Labor

This promise came from F. S. Knox, the company's operations superintendent, who said no outside labor would be hired.

Disavowing any desire to damage the coal properties, the strikers' representatives said maintenance men would be permitted to enter the mines to keep them in condition for immediate operation when the wage dispute is settled.

General Connelly suggested an armistice after he conferred with miners, businessmen and his observers in the district. He was expected to seek immediate consideration of his plan designed to permit reopening of the mines pending settlement of the controversy.

"The operators and miners," the general said, "should get together on the minor things to carry out the obligations of parents to their children. Apparently thousands of children are underfed and underclothed and don't know why. All they know is that they are hungry."

He appealed to both sides to lay side their "petty differences," and

CAPITAL POLICE BATTLE RADICALS

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, March 26—A lively fight broke out today as police attempted to halt a group of radicals who tried to parade past the Japanese embassy on Massachusetts avenue.

Denied permission to parade past the embassy, the radicals marched by in squads of two or three, formed in line and carrying banners. One of them was inscribed "down with Japanese imperialism."

A girl, carrying a banner held over head led the group. Police attempted to halt them and immediately fighting broke out.

Police used clubs and blackjacks in subduing two or three of the men, who fought firecely. There were almost as many officers as demonstrators and within a few minutes the placards and banners were down and policemen in pairs led the demonstrators away toward police patrols.

Burglary "Rung Up."

By The Associated Press

WATERLOO, Ia., March 26—The burglar who got into the Home Park grocery store was honest about it anyway. He took $6.26 from the cash register, and then, just to keep the records straight, rang up the deductions as "paid out" on the machine.

PLANS FOR PICNIC ARE INTERRUPTED

Several small boys apparently imbued with the spirit of spring, set fire to a dead tree in a field on Bellefontaine avenue, near Windsor street, yesterday afternoon to see if it would burn sufficiently to provide a means of preparing a camp supper. Satisfied that the blaze would be sufficient for their purpose, the boys returned to their homes for the "makings" for their supper. In the meantime the blaze set fire to the dry grass. Firemen from the central station extinguished the fire. The boys ate supper at home.

AUTO INDUSTRY PIONEER DIES

Leland, Cadillac Co. Founder, Passes Away at Age of 89.

ACTIVE UNTIL RECENTLY

Break with Old Friend Ford Recalled; Had Notable Career.

By The Associated Press

DETROIT, March 26—Henry M. Leland, 89, the "grand old man" of the automobile industry, died early today in Grace hospital, where he had been ill for several weeks.

Leland was active up until a short time before he entered the hospital on Feb. 25.

Of the several automotive pioneers who visioned the future of the industry, none stood out more prominently than Mr. Leland. Moving westward to Detroit in 1890, he began the manufacture of small tools, later qualified as a gear expert and found his metier—the automobile industry—when he began making transmissions for the one-cylinder car designed in 1900 by Ransom E. Olds.

Basis of Prediction

Before going to Detroit, Mr. Leland had engaged in the manufacture of engines for what he termed "so-called" naphtha launches and it was upon the experience gained in that work that he based his prediction of the future of the internal combustion engines.

It was a strange analogy that the youth who helped make rifles for Union soldiers during the Civil war should, as a septuagenarian in 1917, make the heart of the modern instrument of war, the airplane motor, for use in the World war.

"Beautiful engines they were, too," Mr. Leland once said of the Liberty motors. "They would have won the war if the Kaiser hadn't run away so soon. I used to spend 16 to 18 hours a day at the plant when we were making those engines, but it was no hardship. I felt we were doing a real service, and work is the best fun I have."

Mr. Leland founded the Cadillac Motor Car company and for many years was its president until it was taken over in 1917 by the General Motors corporation. Whether he actually proposed to retire when the Cadillac company was taken over is not known, but when the United States entered the World war, the then 75-year-old mechani-

TRIAL DATE IS SET FOR BANDIT SUSPECT

Joseph Potts Held Under $25,000 on Richwood Bank Robbery Charge.

Special to The Star

MARYSVILLE, O., March 26—Joseph Potts, 34, of near Ridgeway will be tried April 14 on a charge of robbing the Farmers' Deposit bank at Richwood of $10,000 last fall. His trial date was fixed by Judge F. LeRoy Allen in common pleas court here and his bond was set at $25,000 when he pleaded not guilty when arraigned on a bank robbery indictment.

Potts, unable to raise bond, probably will remain in the Union county jail until tried. He said he had retained an attorney.

Authorities suspect that Potts was a member of a gang headed by Frank Circone, leader in the Richwood holdup. Circone and two of his gang are serving penitentiary sentences, and another is being hunted in Columbus for participation in the Richwood holdup.

The formal charge on which Potts recently was indicted by the Union county grand jury is entering the Richwood bank with firearms for the purpose of committing a felony.

RETURNS FINDINGS AGAINST AUDITOR

By The Associated Press

COLUMBUS, O., March 26—City Auditor R. L. Evans of Girard, Trumbull county, was held to be short $5,895.85 in his waterworks accounts by State Examiner C. E. Lippincott, in a report filed with the state bureau of accounting today.

An additional finding for $275 was made against Evans for salary which he had paid his wife "for clerk hire" but which the examiner said lacked proof that she actually had done any work in the office. Evans and his attorneys are now busy for both sums.

RANSOM ASKED

Miss Laurel Morrison, 30-year-old beauty parlor operator of Aurora, Nebr., near Lincoln, is being held by kidnapers for $1,000 ransom, according to a note received by her father.

Stairway Is Bed for Youth, 10; Home Sought

Juvenile court authorities today were making arrangements to provide temporary homes in the detention home for two young Marion newsboys who have been found by police asleep at night in vacant store rooms, hallways and other out-of-the-way places.

The court planned to make the two boys wards after one 19 years old, was found asleep in the stairway of the Eagles temple building at Center and Orchard streets last night. His 12-year-old brother was being sought by juvenile court officers.

Fear of their father's displeasure if they failed to take home enough money from paper sales each night was given by the boys as their reason for sleeping away from home.

The boy found last night by police said his father gave him nine cents each afternoon when he started out to sell papers, and that he was expected to take home not less than 25 cents by nightfall. He had nine cents when found last night.

Police recently found the boys asleep in an automobile parked on an uptown street.

The father and both boys will be questioned, Oscar Gast, juvenile judge, said this morning. An effort will be made to provide the boys with permanent homes.

RESUMES REWRITING OF REVENUE MEASURE

House Drops Proposal To Tax Beer as Budget Balancing Aid.

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, March 26—Lopping off and patching on, the house resumed today its almost undirected rewriting of the big revenue bill upon which the government must depend for balancing the budget.

The members took up where they left off yesterday upon rejecting an amendment to tax legalized 2.75 beer, and accepting the proffered tax on oil imports. The beer item was thrown out 216 to 132.

The oil tax and several other provisions were left more or less hanging in the air because rejection of the sales tax had removed from the bill the authorizing language upon which excise taxes must be pinned.

The bill's mainstay, the group of excises, stamp taxes, transfer taxes and so on which will be needed to replace the general sales tax, was not expected to face the wrangle of house debate before next week.

The beer amendment, sponsored by Representative Cullen (D., N. Y.), let loose upon the house three hours of furious debate in which wets and drys tilted with might and main.

The approved oil tax represented victory in a three-year struggle by the oil producing states and independent producers to obtain a tariff on imports.

DUBLIN GUARDS AGAINST CLASH

Precautions Taken as "Bloody Easter Week" of 1916 Is Recalled.

POSTERS COVER CITY

Urge United Effort To Break Connection with England.

By The Associated Press

DUBLIN, March 26—Easter eve, the sixteenth since the revolution which flared on "bloody Easter week" in 1916, found the Republican spirit more active in Ireland today than in years, with some trepidition over the possibility of trouble before the morrow passes.

It is the first time in years that the Republicans, under the organization of the "Irish Republican army" have been permitted a free rein for their memorial celebrations in honor of the 1916 revolution and the Republican leaders who died for the cause.

On that fact, however, officials of the government today pinned a confidence that the day would be peaceful.

As a precautionary measure, however, the regular Free State army was ordered confined to barracks over the week-end, to prevent any possibility of clashes with the Republican irregular forces.

Dublin was covered with posters reproducing the proclamation of the republic during the week of Easter, 1916, when 106 British soldiers were killed in the fighting, most of which took place in the streets of the capital. The posters called on the people to unite in "one supreme effort" to break the connection with the empire and to establish a "free sovereign, Irish republic."

DEATH OF DELAWARE MAN CALLED SUICIDE

Prosecutor Makes Statement; Revolver Is Discovered in River.

Discovery yesterday of a .32 caliber revolver in the Olentangy river near where the body of Burt P. Benton of Delaware and former county prosecutor was found Thursday, was generally accepted by authorities at Delaware today as unquestionable proof that the attorney took his own life.

A .32 caliber bullet was found in the former prosecutor's body Friday. One shot had been fired from the revolver found in the river by newspapermen.

Benton evidently pulled the trigger four times before one of the shells exploded. The hammer of the revolver had been snapped on three cartridges which failed to explode before exploding the only shot fired from the gun, Delaware newspapermen said this morning.

They also indicated that Benton had been in financial difficulties and poor health.

Coroner A. R. Callander today retained his original theory that Benton probably died from cerebral hemorrhage following shock from the bullet wound. He previously announced that the bullet wound would not have caused Benton's death, and said that Benton had not drowned.

W. W. Hill, Delaware county prosecutor, said that the death, to him, was a "plain case of suicide."

HOOVER ISSUES BUDGET PLEA

Savings Necessary, but Heavy Taxes Can't Be Avoided, He Says.

APPEAL MADE TO PUBLIC

Declares Balancing Budget Essential to Economic Recovery.

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, March 26—Describing balancing the budget as the "keystone of recovery," President Hoover said in a statement published today that this "must in the main be accomplished by an increase in taxation."

He added that a further reduction of government expenditures is expected but that the potential savings by this means are not sufficient to avoid heavier taxes.

Voicing confidence that both parties intend to see that the budget is balanced, Mr. Hoover said that unless this is done "the several measures for restoration of public confidence and reconstruction which we have already undertaken will be incomplete and the depression prolonged indefinitely."

In a strong appeal to the people to support and not obstruct congress in its efforts to bring receipts and expenditures to a level, the Chief Executive asserted that of the $4,100,000,000 budget, a total of $2,000,000,000 can not be reduced and the $700,000,000 for army and navy should not be touched in any manner to impair the strength of the nation's defense. This leaves but $1,300,000,000 plus postoffice expenditures, out of which savings can be made, and the sum covers many vital services of the government.

By contrast, he pointed out, the estimated deficit for next year is $1,250,000,000 coming on top of a two billion shortage this year and a half billion deficit last year.

Much saving is possible, the President maintained, through postponement of the least essential activities, elimination of unnecessary functions and "business-like reorganization" of government activities.

"But when all this is done," he went on," the balancing of the budget must in the main be accomplished by an increase in taxation which will restore government revenues. Economies in expenditure or increase in taxes alike call for sacrifices—sacrifices which are a part of the country's war on depression."

Travel Contest Sponsors Warn of Closing Date

Registrations for the 1932 travel contest will close at midnight, Saturday, April 2. The first announcement of the closing was made Wednesday and since that day many new applications have been received. Those expecting yet to enter were urged to do so immediately when the sponsors again warned of the closing date.

After April 2 no nomination blanks will be recognized, and the sponsors, the Marion merchants, the Erie railroad and The Star expressed their hope today that all eighth junior and senior students in Marion and the surrounding communities, have their nomination blanks in the ballot boxes before that time.

One in every four students in junior and senior grades in the 10 districts, is entered in the contest to date, a survey of the list of candidates shows.

At The Star office alone, 25 nominations were received Friday, and the number to be found in the ballot boxes in all participating Marion stores when the boxes were emptied today, is expected to far exceed this number.

Approximately 3,000 boys and girls in Marion and 25 communities are eligible and more than 700 are entered.

The award offered the 12 winners, three from Marion and one in each of the nine outlying districts, has received the commendation of parents, teachers and school heads.

ALL CHURCHES PLAN SERVICES ON EASTER

Worship on Anniversary of Christ's Resurrection Will Mark End of Lent.

RAIN MAY DAMPEN EASTER PARADE

Marion's Easter paraders will be greeted with a light rain changing to snow, the Ohio weatherman predicts. Cloudy and colder weather tonight and Sunday promises a parade of winter coats instead of spring finery.

A forecast of unfavorable weather is general. The east is promised week-end showers, ending probably Sunday morning, an Associated Press wire states.

Yesterday in Marion the thermometer rose to 62 degrees. Last night a light rain fell, and the temperature dropped to 48. The high a year ago was 40 and the low 30.

In the end of the sabbath, as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week, came Mary Magdalene and the other Mary to see the sepulchre.

"And, behold, there was a great earthquake: for the angel of the Lord descended from heaven, and came and rolled back the stone from the door, and sat upon it.

"His countenance was like lightning, and his raiment white as snow:

"And for fear of him the keepers did shake, and became as dead men.

"And the angel answered and said unto the women, Fear not ye: for I know that ye seek Jesus, which was crucified.

"He is not here: for He is risen as He said. Come, see the place where the Lord lay."

—St. Matthew, 28:1-6.

The joyous thanksgiving of Easter Sunday after the six weeks solemnity of Lent, is reflected in the commemorative programs which Marion Protestant and Catholic churches have prepared.

Flowers will bank the altars of the churches for the Easter services and at St. Mary's Catholic and St. Paul's Episcopal churches, candles will shed their light.

Masses will be sung at 6:30, 8, 9:30 and 11 a. m. at St. Mary's church. The mass at 11 a. m. will mark the solemn opening of the forty hours devotion. Rev. Father J. D. McFarland of Cincinnati will be a visiting priest.

Holy communion will be the paramount service at St. Paul's Episcopal church. The program for the day opens at 8 a. m. with Holy communion, followed at 9:45 by senior class, church school and at 10:30 by Holy communion, full choral, and sermon by the rector, Rev. S. S. Hardy. At 2 p. m. the young men's class church school meeting will be held and at 3 the children's festival service will be an attractive Easter program.

Sunrise services, pageants, plays, cantatas, rites of baptism and reception of new members, Easter services by choirs, and in every church, an Easter sermon, are to

TWO SUSPECTS REPORTED SEEN

CONDUCT CITYWIDE HUNT

Norfolk, Va., Reports Continued Hope for Recovery of Baby.

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, March 26—A sudden, unexpected tip today swung the feverish search for the Lindbergh baby and his kidnapers into the center of the capital.

As hopes alternately rose and waned from the many clues being followed hither and yon about the country, a man greatly resembling Harry Fleischer, reputed leader of the Detroit purple gang — wanted for questioning in connection with the case since he dropped from sight some time ago—sought lodging last night on an obscure Washington street.

Harry Fleischer

It was nearly midnight. Four youths who saw him and another man walk to the door, noted a small car outside. In it sat a woman and a baby. They recalled news pictures of Fleischer and when the men had turned away for lack of room, called the police.

From the rogues' gallery, officers said, they immediately picked out Fleischer's picture. By radio and teletype the authorities sent orders to spot the car or the men and call reserves. Cruising police autos, radio equipped, carried on an incessant watch through the night.

The police were certain the group had found lodging in the city either in a rooming house or a tourist camp. They warned patrolmen that the men were dangerous.

Fleischer and Abie Wagner, both said by the New Jersey police to be "known kidnapers" have been sought intensively for some time, ostensibly to get an account of their activities just prior to, at the time of and since the kidnaping. Wagner was said to have been seen in central New Jersey shortly before the baby was taken, but both men have dropped from sight.

Intermediaries at Norfolk Optimistic

NORFOLK, Va., March 26—The very Reverend Dean H. Dobson-Peacock today said Norfolk intermediaries in their effort to return the kidnaped Charles A. Lindbergh, Jr., were still optimistic but that "there are no developments of any kind."

"We don't know," he said

There was no information forthcoming from the intervenors here regarding a reported contact made with a representative of the kidnapers Thursday after the return of the Norfolk men from a conference with Colonel Lindbergh. Believe Lindbergh Plans New Appeal

By The Associated Press

HOPEWELL, N. J., March 26—While three Norfolk citizens did their best to restore the kidnaped Charles A. Lindbergh, Jr., to his parents today, his father was believed to be considering issuing of a fourth appeal to the parents who stole the child March 1.

Twice Col. Lindbergh, willing to pay ransom to get the child back, has issued public pleas to the kidnapers to open negotiations, but these have failed to accomplish the desired object. Information from friends of the family was that he might try again. He has pledged himself not to try to injure the kidnapers if they will return the child.

ROME BEGINS EASTER RITES

Church Bells and Organs Herald Advent of Time for Rejoicing.

By The Associated Press

ROME, Italy, March 26—Lent was over officially at noon today and church bells and organs, silent since Holy Thursday morning, apprised the capital city of the Roman Catholic world that the time had come to rejoice in Christ's resurrection.

Special rituals commemorated the day. In St. Peter's the Pope's paschal candle, eight feet high and three inches in diameter, was blessed by Cardinal Pacelli. The cardinal lighted the Easter fire by striking a spark from a flint. The "new fire" as it is called, was suggestive of Christ's resurrection.

At the conclusion of the mass the cardinal imparted a benediction with relics said to have been connected with Christ's passion and death.

In every city in Italy priests went from house to house to bless them. Rooms and offices were sprinkled with holy water. According to an old custom, the master of the house placed a silver offering in the holy water cannister, carried by an acolyte.

In some homes, also, according to old custom, the families had placed their food for tonight's dinner on the table, so that the priest could bless the first meal they would eat following Lent.

Many young men, including hundreds of foreigners, who have been studying in the Rome seminaries, were ordained priests this morning.

Fifth Ave. Ready for Easter Parade

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK, March 26—Aside from its paramount religious features, the eve of Easter in the metropolis found:

Dimes doing the work of dollars.

An electric eye watching for Easter down.

Air traffic at a new peak.

And the weather man all fussed.

Stores, with prices slashed to what many termed "pre-war" levels, seemed satisfied with the holiday trade. Those who delight in being well-groomed prepared to make the annual fashion parade on Fifth avenue as brilliant as ever, though florists said gardenias will be more popular than orchids this year.

An electric photo cell atop a skyscraper was ready to catch the first dim rays of dawn to signal the start of sunrise services in which thousands will participate.

Many extra planes were booked to carry Easter travelers on their way. From Newark airport, 580 flew yesterday, surpassing last year's total of 420. Railroads, setting up bargain counters for excursion tickets, had to add extra trains.

HOOVER BACKS MOVE TO INCREASE VOTERS

Indorses Junior C. of C. Attempt To Draw 50 Millions to Polls.

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, March 26—President Hoover today formally indorsed a movement to bring out a record vote at the polls in the coming presidential election.

The chief executive issued a statement this morning, expressing approval of a campaign by the United States Junior Chamber of Commerce to increase by 14,000,000 the number of voters as compared with those in the 1928 election.

The chamber hopes for a total of 50,000,000.

"I do warmly approve of this undertaking," the President said. "Ours is a representative government and it can function effectively only when the will of the people is clearly expressed at the polls."

Harlan Miller of Des Moines, Ia., chairman of the board of the United States Junior Chamber has called twice upon President Hoover in recent days, seeking his approval of the get-out-the-vote campaign.

COLLEGE STUDENTS' "RESEARCH TRIP" HALTED

The group of Columbia university students shown above met an unfriendly reception when they tried to enter Bell county, Kentucky, yesterday, to investigate conditions among coal miners. Officers turned them back and today they were in Knoxville, Tenn. charging that a "reign of terror" exists in Bell county and that alleged rough treatment they received is proof of this charge. They had been warned against attempting the visit, which they said was planned for "sociological research." The picture above, an Associated Press photo, was taken just as they prepared to start their trip to Bell county.

STUDENTS' VISIT TO KENTUCKY CUT SHORT

Not Welcome, "Researchers" Find, on Trip to Mountain Coal Field.

By The Associated Press

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., March 26—The college students who went over the Cumberland mountains to see what they could see in the Kentucky mine fields have returned here rebuffed, indignant and undecided whether to try to force their "sociological research."

It was a fruitless trip that netted the party, members of the National Students league, little more than a view of the scenery on the Kentucky slopes.

Officers turned the students back when they tried to enter Bell county, Kentucky, to investigate conditions among coal miners. The entire group returned to Knoxville without a halt. The party did not even pause for food on the return trip.

Whether they will try to get a federal court order to force Bell county authorities to permit them to go on with their contemplated study of mine field conditions, was to be discussed today.

Bob Hall, Columbia university student and chairman of the steering committee, issued a statement charging that "one of the guards brutally twisted the arm of one of the girls and flashed a revolver" when students protested.

Charges of a "reign of terror in Bell county" and that the "constitution of the United States and Kentucky are not recognized," the students contended, "have been substantiated" by incidents of their trip.

Federal Department Refuses To Act

WASHINGTON, March 26—The justice department today answered a request for protection of college students studying mining conditions in Kentucky with the statement that it is a matter to be handled by the states.

When the bus appeared he took the group in charge and ordered them taken to Middlesboro. He said the students appeared to be another section of the collegians who are trying to investigate the coal fields labor controversy, but that he thought a few of those who were ejected last night were in the bus.

completely since. Countless tips have placed them in New York, on Long Island and elsewhere, but none so far has materialized.

Wearing Bandage

In the description circulated by police last night the man said to resemble Fleischer was described as wearing a bandage on his head, partly covered by a hat and looking like a foreigner.

The boys who saw the man said he was "tough looking." The companion looked like an Italian, they said

None of the several people who saw the men got a good look at the woman and baby.

Police received a report that a man resembling Fleischer spent the night at a tourist camp at Hyattsville, Md., near here and left early today for Baltimore.

Maryland state police, however, said they placed no credence in the report and were not watching the Washington to Baltimore highways.

Some doubt was expressed by Washington police as to the identification of the men seen. They considered it almost incredible that any kidnaper versed in underworld ways would present himself at a rooming house with a woman and baby at a time like this, and at an hour so late as to make arrival conspicuous.

Maryland Shore Searched by Police

By The Associated Press

CHESTERTOWN, Md., March 26—Activities of New Jersey state police on Maryland's eastern shore in search of the Lindbergh baby were revealed here today. Wade Smith, Maryland state policeman said he accompanied a corporal and a detective to Rockhill, a fishing center on the Chesapeake bay 16 miles west of here; to Betterton, 16 miles north of the bay and to the Chester river water front here. Wharf keepers, fishermen and bay boat pilots were carefully questioned, but no clues were unearthed.

The Jersey officers, Smith said, were acting on the assumption that the child might be held on a vessel in the bay or one of its eastern shore tributaries. He said they made their investigation in this region this week but would not say on what day. Smith said he didn't know whether they returned to New Jersey or continued their search on the eastern shore.

cal genius got into the fray by organizing the Lincoln Motor company chiefly for the production of the Liberty motor.

Hits Financial Rocks

Financial troubles, however, waylaid the Lincoln company and it went into a federal receivership. That litigation ultimately led to a break between Mr. Leland and his old friend, Henry Ford. The latter bought in the Lincoln properties at the receivership sale for $8,000,000. Six years later Mr. Leland and his son, Wilfred, brought suit against Henry and Edsel Ford, alleging breach of faith. The Lelands sought $6,000,000 damages for original stockholders of the Lincoln company, claiming that the Fords had verbally agreed to reimburse the stockholders when they took over the properties. Ford won out in the long drawnout litigation that followed.

Henry M. Leland was born at Danville, Vt., Feb. 16, 1843. He gleaned his education, as he expressed it, "in the little red school houses of Vermont and Massachusetts."

Spirit of Better Fellowship Brought Out by the Depression, Will Reports

BY WILL ROGERS

W[illegible] all I know is just what I [illegible] in the papers. Poor old [illegible] while the Lindbergh case [illegible] heighth they even had [illegible] some of the adds. Lets [illegible] the world going any-

[illegible]pression scraped the bot- [illegible] is it anchored there? [illegible]ppen for a few days in [illegible]t make you think, well [illegible] is turning. Then the [illegible] all that is washed up [illegible]ks like we dont know a [illegible] They are getting a lot of [illegible]ple employed, due to some [illegible] work of some very able [illegible]e spirited men. I have a [illegible] the East, one of the big [illegible]nal polo players, Cheever [illegible] and he has done a lot of fine work along that line.

You know this darn thing has made the whole country better off in a lot of ways. Its done away with four flushing. If a man hasent got it, he dont mind telling you right out that he hasent. Its made poverty fashionable. Its brought out some mighty good qualities in lots of people. There is a spirit of better fellowship among everyone I think. Things really are not as bad off as some paint em. That is I mean if the ones out of work could get jobs. Course there is lots of things that are not making money, but they are not suffering so much. Everybody is living cheaper, still there is lots of things that havent come down in comparison to other things. Rents are still high in comparison to food, but everybody is trying to make the house or apartment pay a return on what it cost them at the time of the boom. They are not making any money out of the house, according to the cost price, but the cost price is not liable to ever be what it was. Other business have charged it off and called it a day, and started in on a new scale.

Cost Not Cut

The darndest crime of the whole thing is farm machinery. Never did a farmer have as little, yet never has his machinery cost as much. I think their earnings have kept up during all this hard times. They know an old boy has got to have a plow, so make him pay for it. Most men that I have talked to that ought to know, (but Lord that don't mean anything, who does know anything?) Well most of them are of the opinion that things will never be as they were, and I dont suppose anybody wants to see that "Cuckoo" stage again, but these men seem to think that things will be more like they were away along before the war. That is in prices. Things you have to sell will be cheap but things you have to buy to eat, wear, and use will be in comparison.

I can remember when cattlemen made plenty of money and got ahold of all their big ranches on three and four cents a pound beef, but other things they had to buy and use were in comparison. Land taxes is the thing. They got so high that there is no chance to make anything. Not only land but all property tax. You see in the old days, (I am speaking of when I was a boy in the forty's) why the only thing they knew how to tax was land, or a house. Well that condition went along for quite awhile, so even today the whole country tries to run its revenue on taxes on land. They never ask if the land makes anything. "Its land aint it? Well tax it then." Millions and millions of people dont pay an income tax, because they dont earn enough to pay on one, but you pay a land tax whether it ever did or ever will earn you a penny. And the taxes we pay now are on "After the war valuation" when things you raised were at their highest. Now we got some kind of a big overhauling on this tax thing. Different conditions make different taxes. All taxes should be on income, and where there is no income either personality, or on your property, why you shouldnt pay anything. You should pay on things that you buy outside of the bare necessities.

I think this sales tax is the best tax we have had in years. Its what they call painless, thats when you dont know you are paying it. Course thats just a name, no tax is really painless. Then get the income tax high. You got to earn big money or you dont pay it, so there should never be any holler about that, but there should be a distinction between earned and unearned income. For instance a man that earns every dollar by his work or efforts, then another earns the same by having enough money invested to bring him in that much. One has his principal to fall back on, and the other has nothing to fall back on when his earning capacity has diminished.

Oh, but the tough part of our whole system is the amount of money they are spending, hundreds, thousands, practically millions that are working for the state, the city, the federal government. There is hundreds of different branches, and bureau's that everybody knows is not essential. But they were politically created to give jobs, and no politician has the nerve to do away with em. Its not a bit better than the government that we got for one third the money twenty years ago. But we will do like the British, we will muddle through. We are kinder like China we are so big and powerful that we get along in spite of all the bad management we have.

Gosh wasent we crazy there for awhile! Why the thought never entered our head that we wasen't the brightest, wisest, and most accomplished people that ever was on this earth. Haden we figured out "Mass Production?" Couldent we make more things than anybody? Did the thought ever enter our bone head that the time might come when nobody would want all these things we were making. No we had it all figured out that the more we made the more they would want.

Honest as we look back on it now, somebody ought to have taken each one of us and soaked our fat heads. Bought everything under the sun that anybody had to sell, if he would sell it on enough payments. Where was our payments going to be if we lost our job? Why that had never entered our heads. Why should we lose our jobs? Wasent all our big men telling us things was even going to get better. Was our government or our prominent men warning us? If we had had a "prominent" man he would have but we just dident have any. But we cant lay the blame on to that, we all got to lay it on ourselves. Each one of us individually as we look back we can see what mess we made, but the drunk is over, and this sobering up is terrible, but as bad as it is, its better than any other country. So cheer up! Thats the only thing they dont tax you on.

Marion Churches Filled at Good Friday Services

Protestants and Catholics Worship on Anniversary of Crucifixion of Christ; Ministerial Association Sponsors Union Meeting at Calvary Evangelical Church.

Good Friday services in Marion churches attracted large congregations of worshippers. Calvary Evangelical church, where union Protestant services were held, was filled during the three hours from 12 noon to 3 p. m. with the congregation shifting as the worshippers came and went.

St. Mary's Catholic church was the scene of solemn Tre Ore devotions, and throughout the day and evening members of the parish entered to pray.

The three hours of Christ's suffering and his seven last words on the cross was the theme of sermons in all churches where Good Friday services were conducted. Several Protestant churches conducted denominational Good Friday services yesterday and last night.

The Marion County Ministerial association sponsored the services at Calvary church, with the president, Rev. Carl V. Roop of the First United Brethren church presiding. Rev. E. Radebaugh pastor of Calvary church, led the interdenominational communion service which concluded the three hours of music, prayers and sermons.

In the absence of Rev. E. C. Pottorf of Fite Memorial Baptist church, Dr. C. E. Turley of Epworth M. E. church delivered the sermon on the subject, "Today Thou Shalt Be with Me in Paradise."

Maxwell of Grace Evangelical church; "My God Why Hast Thou Forsaken Me," by Rev. James O. Dodd of Central Christian church; "I Thirst," by Rev. Robert W. Rucker of the First Reformed church; "It is Finished," by Rev. W. Martell George of Wesley M. E. church and "Father, Into Thy Hands I Commend My Spirit," by Rev. Lawrence A. For Monday, March 28

MONDAY'S ASTROLOGICAL CHART shows great activity in the launching of new plans and projects, with much stirring in all directions, with industry and determination to achieve these undertakings. But shun strife, disputes and impetuous and too aggressive measures and safeguard the funds against loss and speculation.

Those whose birthday it is may anticipate a favorable year for the launching of new propositions and projects. A very stirring time may be expected, with great gain and progress provided strife, impetuosity and rash conduct be eliminated. Be cautious with funds, as speculation or chance imperil these. A child born on this day should be very active, clever, ambitious and may be able to attain success with mergers, rings, secret orders and through diplomacy or strategem.

Out of the Road-Building Dollar Goes for Labor!
Good Roads always were a good investment of public money. But today, while jobs are scarce, they're an even better investment. On an average, 90c out of every dollar spent for good roads goes to labor on the job or in manufacturing plants. Thus you can help relieve unemployment by backing the Good Roads Movement. And remember that modern brick-surfaced pavements are smooth... and durable, too. A gilt-edged investment in Good Roads.

"For He Is Risen!"

A SERMONETTE

JAMES O. DODD, B. D., Minister Central Christian Church

Text: "He is not here for He is risen . . . Come, see the place where the Lord lay."—Matthew 28:6.

ONE does not associate gladness with the grave. It is generally a place of sadness and mourning. Sombre dress, tender memories, tears and flowers are the common associations of the grave. Still we find in our text that when the angel desired to make the women glad, he bade them to come and investigate the grave. It is one of the strangest episodes of history. To exaggerate its uniqueness is an impossibility. At the grave he brought joy and cheerfulness into their lives, and gave to the entire world the assurance of immortality. He said unto them, "He is not here; for He is risen . . . Come, see the place where the Lord lay."

One marvelous thing was that that place was empty, though only the angel knew why it was empty. It had not been robbed of its priceless treasure: He is not here—He is risen. The Sadhu Sundar Singh tells of a friend of his who visited the tomb of Mohammed. It was very splendid and adorned with diamonds, and they said to him, "Mohammed's bones are here." He went to France and saw Napoleon's tomb, and they said to him, "Napoleon's bones are here." But when he journeyed to the Holy Land and visited the sepulchre of Jesus, nobody there said anything like that. That was the marvelous thing about the place. It thrilled these women to the depths. The grave was empty. The Master was not there. In the power of an endless life He had arisen. That empty grave, flung open for inspection, lies at the back of all Easter gladness which transforms and revivifies the world. In the rising of Christ all His claims are vindicated. In His rising His Father's love in vindicated. His rising satisfies the human heart, which needs more than the inspiration of a memory. The certainty that we have a living Friend, who will be with us always in a living friendship, springs from the investigation of a grave. For once, the grave is not a place of sadness. It is the home of song, and not of tears. It is the birthplace of a triumphant joy that has made music through the darkest hours. "He is not here; He is risen." He has won the victory over death and the grave. He has taken away our defeat and erased the sting of death. "Come, see the place where the Lord lay."

Daily Proverb—That chastity of honor which felt a stain like a wound.—Burke.

The Graf Zeppelin, carrying passengers and mail, has made the first of a series of trips for this year from Friedrichshafen to Brazil. A few more, and such flights will hardly be matters of news.

Easing his estimate on the $190,000,000 received this year up to date, Secretary Mills figures that the return from the income tax for 1931 will be off $500,000,000. This can hardly do other than inspire the house insurgents to "soak it to the rich" some more.

From Tokyo comes report that the Japanese are laying plans for a huge migration for the colonization of Manchuria. Here we have at least partial verification of the suspicion the world has entertained since the Nipponese invasion of territory generally conceded to be China's.

By a vote of 216 to 182, the house rejected the proposal to tax 2.75 per cent. beer, which should be made under permits from the treasury department. Sales tax rejected; beer tax rejected; the income tax returns dwindling! It begins to look as though Uncle Sam will have to fall back on the old, reliable, packhorse, the gasoline tax.

Washington is greatly stirred over notes received by a number of prominent residents threatening the kidnapping of their children. Mrs. Nicholas Longworth being one of the recipients. The scare being experienced may recall to congress the fact that it is sadly remiss in not having legislated to make kidnapping a federal crime, which would permit the pursuing of that despicable brand of criminals across state lines.

Senator George W. Norris, of Nebraska, questions the sincerity of the President, claiming that Mr. Hoover signed the anti-writ bill although opposed to it. Like the most of the radicals, George wouldn't be himself were he not questioning the acts of all not in agreement with the policies of the so-called progressives, and making charges is his long suit. Still, come to think of it, much is to be forgiven any disappointed old man.

William Gibbs McAdoo says that if the railroad people had listened to him in 1919 "they would not be in the fix they are in now." If the railroad people hadn't been compelled to listen to him in 1918, there would have been no occasion for them being in the position they are in now. They would not have been compelled to rebuild their lines and renew their equipment, and could have laid away a surplus for a rainy day.

He Started Something.

The story of the origin of the word, boycott, heard so often in connection with the trouble in the Orient and discussion of ways and means to stop it, gives most of the reasons why this country is unlikely ever to use it again as a coercive instrument. Ever since President Hoover was petitioned last February by a group of men and women to place the United States on record with the League of Nations as being willing to concur in economic measures to restore peace, objections to boycotts have been numerous and vigorous—and with good reason.

The term originated in Ireland in 1880, when a certain Captain Boycott, an unpopular member of the landlord class, aroused the wrath of his tenants by harsh treatment. They banded together to ostracize him; hence the present meaning of the word. It has been broadened greatly to include almost any direct substitute for armed force, though thoroughly applied, its effect as often as not is to produce clashes of armed force. That, in itself, would have been sufficient to warn this country against it, even had there not been fear of more direct consequences.

There were, specifically, jeopardization of American investments in Japan and American trade with Japan—the latter an item of approximately $219,000,000. Captain Boycott's servants didn't have anything of such magnitude to consider when they started their campaign. It must be remembered, of course, that all they did was to give the name to the practice; the United States is an old hand at withholding economics sanctions, which is the same thing. Back in 1812 the embargo and non-intercourse acts came as near to wrecking American commerce as any deliberately planned and executed scheme could or ever will come.

Perhaps President Hoover was recalling history when he put his foot down on the proposition to penalize private business for the sake of showing Japan what no power but time can do now—the wrongness of her actions in Manchuria and Shanghai.

Erring Jeffersonians.

Justification of action by liberal interpretation of a great man's opinion is tricky business. Self-styled Jeffersonians, in and out of congress, who recently repudiated the leadership of their elder statesmen on the pretense of abiding by the principles of the eminent founding father should examine with acute interest two literal transcriptions of his opinion on confiscatory taxation and the circumstances which sometimes make it appear as an attractive alternative.

In 1816, Jefferson wrote this statement, which is recalled and published for current attention by the New York Times:

"To take from one because it is thought that his own industry and that of his father's has acquired too much, in order to spare to others who or whose fathers have not exercised equal industry and skill, is to violate arbitrarily the first principle of association, the guarantee to every one of a free exercise of his industry and the fruits acquired by it."

In 1820, concerning a state of the treasury which exists today and the real causes thereof, Jefferson wrote:

"If there be anything amiss in the present state of our affairs, as the formidable deficit lately unfolded to us indicates, I ascribe it to the inattention of congress to their duties, to their unwise dissipation and waste of public contributions. They seemed, some little while ago, to be at a loss for objects whereon to throw away the supposed fathomless funds of the treasury."

Concluding this damaging literal recitation of opinion, the New York Times makes the best possible comment: "How painfully contemporary that reads! The Jeffersonians in Washington invoke their god only to disobey him." How funny their mistake would be if it were not so close to tragedy!

While the balancing of our own governmental budget is as yet seemingly hopelessly muddled, Germany has succeeded in balancing her budget of $2,000,000,000 for next year. But then, the majority of the law-makers of Germany are laboring in behalf of the country, rather than engaged in a campaign of vengeance.

The name of John J. Meyer, former member of the examining board of plumbers, which is soon to be the subject of a public hearing before the Hofstadter legislative committee investigating political rottenness in New York City, has been added to the committee's long list of missing witnesses headed by Russell T. Sherwood, Mayor Walker's financial agent. Meyer is reported to have withdrawn his accounts in sixteen or seventeen New York banks and left the country. Anyway, carrying accounts in almost a score of banks gets away from the plan of putting official pickings away in a big tin box.

Everybody's Shoulder to the Wheel.

The original crooner is told by President Hoover that a medal awaits the man who can sing a song that will make people forget their troubles. No time is lost by the singing gentleman, none other than Rudy Vallee, in letting the press know of his assignment. Even a presidential jest has its quota of importance.

Any change that may be caused by Tin Pan alley's scramble to take Mr. Hoover at his word and get that coveted medal and the publicity that goes with it will be welcomed by the people who listen to the songs. Unfortunately, however, there is only an outside chance that whatever new ditties may be hashed up will be free from the customary repetitions and nauseam of love, dove, moon, soon, spoon, robin, bobbin', love nest, hope chest, twinkling star, there you are, baby and maybe.

The whole morbid subject enlivens the suspicion that song writers may have had more to do with making the depression serious than any one knows. Every time another radio was sold another family came under their influence. So much lachrymose mooing was bound to have its effect. But then, at a time like this, it's up to every one to put his shoulder to the wheel. If the crooners and the song writers think they can help, more power to them.

It has been discovered that 1,200 pints of bonded whisky stored in the basement of the federal building in Indianapolis—a part of a carload of 1,182 sacks of the stuff seized at Evansville in 1931 while enroute from Ansley, Mississippi to Chicago—have disappeared. When it is stated that the storeroom is the same room from which liquor valued at $225,000 was taken six years ago, it is not unfair to conclude that the federal enforcement agencies are somewhat slow to learn, and that's putting the case mighty mildly.

A Dangerous Counterfeit.

Chief W. H. Moran, of the United States secret service, warns the country against a new and dangerous counterfeit five-dollar note on the Champaign National bank, of Urbana, this state. It is of the 1929 series with the portrait of Lincoln. The check letter is L; face plate No. 107; back plate number missing; charter No. 639; serial No. F062051A; E. E. Jones, registrar of the treasury, and W. O. Woods, treasurer of the United States. It is printed on bond paper from plates produced by the photo-mechanical process and the signatures of C. P. Strawn, cashier, and D. T. Ralsons, president, both of which are fictitious, are affixed by the use of a rubber stamp.

At last the counterfeiters are getting down to a denomination which will cause a lot of us to sit up and take notice.

Silas Strawn, president of the United States chamber of commerce, holds that the campaign of the house insurgents led by La Guardia, "to soak" the rich by placing the burden of balancing the budget upon them, is doomed to failure for the reason that "there are no rich." A little thought regarding the net earnings of industrial and commercial enterprises for the last two years is liable to convince even the ordinarily skeptical that big incomes have been few and far between since the Wall Street panic. So far as incomes are concerned, Mr. Strawn is pretty near right in his contention.

COOLIDGE ON HIGH TAXES.

When Mr. Coolidge talks about tax reduction he is in his element. Perhaps no man in America has given more intensive study to the questions of taxation than he, and there are none who better understand the relation of taxation to economic welfare. Therefore, a statement from him on this subject, at this moment when taxation is uppermost in the public mind, is not only timely, but of great value. In an article in the current issue of the Saturday Evening Post he discusses the present tax situation with his usual clarity and common sense.

Conceding that increase in federal taxes and imposition of new taxes are necessary to meet the existing deficit in federal revenues, he rightly insists that this increase should be temporary and only to meet the emergency. But, he adds, and again rightly, "the only permanent remedy, the only relief for high taxes, is a reduction of public expenditures." Then he urges a combination on a non-partisan basis of wage earners and business men for mutual protection, who should be "organized, alert and vocal." He means, we assume, that there should be a widespread and formidable organization of the people to compel congress and legislatures and municipal governments to reduce taxes. That the farmers should share in the movement is obviously intended, from the emphasis he places upon the disastrous effect of high taxes upon agriculture, pointing out that the average tax for the six years from 1922 to 1927 was 23.3 per cent. of the net income from farms. "It is no wonder," he says, "that in his attempt to take more produce to pay these high government taxes the farmer became smothered in his own surplus."

That high taxes have been one of the chief causes of the depression, as he says, there can be no doubt. In 1931 taxes took some twenty-two per cent. of the total income of the country. As in the case of the farmer, taxes created a need in previous years for larger production and larger gross profits to overcome the burdens which excessive taxes have laid upon industry in general. In our present situation the continuance of such taxes constitutes an intolerable burden. But clearly taxes can not be reduced unless the expenditures of government are reduced. And these expenditures can not be reduced unless the people demand it in no uncertain voice. No small blame for these taxes rests upon the people themselves. Governments, with popular support, have taken upon themselves innumerable tasks that formerly were not thought of in connection with government, most of them highly attractive and desirable, but all contributing greatly to the increase of governmental costs. We have consciously or unconsciously encouraged the creation of numerous bureaus and departments that were unthought of a few years ago, and each of these grows in size and cost annually. More than that, the people have been indifferent to the efforts to reform and reorganize our systems of government in the interest of economy. Nothing is more difficult than to effect such reforms by the governments themselves, unless there is not only strong support but strong insistence from the people. It is no use for people to rail about high taxes unless they are determined to do something about it. It is no use to condemn high taxes and at the same time call upon government for more expenditures. All governmental expenditures must be paid from taxes, and in the last analysis the burden of taxes falls upon the whole people.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

MORE TROUBLE IN INDIA.

The situation in India has not been made less tense by the action of the All-India Moslem conference in declaring for the use of forcible measures unless the government embodies its demands in the new constitution it is hoped to have ready by June. This is a new attitude for the Moslem population to take. Evidently the proscriptive spirit manifested by the Hindus is at the bottom of it. The congress party, which is exclusively Hindu, has consistently resorted to violence in endeavoring to work its will upon the government. Although the viceroy has very properly repressed with vigor the consequent disorders, the attempt to work out reforms favoring the natives has been much hampered by the hatred these have engendered.

Now the Moslem are becoming anti-British in their attitude. They demand a representation of fifty per cent. in the commissioned and non-commissioned officers in the army, and a one-third representation in the civil service and the railway service as well. Since the burden of defending India still rests upon Great Britain, it is plain that specific allotments like these are quite impractical. The Hindus would be the first to resent them. That the Indian princes should now begin to doubt the wisdom of bringing their independent states under the control of a federal authority constituted in such a fashion is not surprising.—Philadelphia Record.

Get Rid of Your Asthma.

BY ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D.

Asthma is an uncomfortable disease, characterized by periodic attacks of shortness of breath. These attacks are accompanied by signs of irritation of the bronchial tubes, with expectoration of mucus.

The accepted theory is that the symptoms are produced by a spasm which involves the muscles of the smaller bronchial tubes. To be frank about it, the causes of this spasm has furnished a real problem to the medical profession.

Asthmatic attacks may occur at any time from infancy to old age, but children and young adults furnish the largest number of cases. In certain families asthma may occur in each of several generations. A neurotic tendency is supposed to favor the development of the disease.

The exciting causes of asthma are many. Some cases, usually traced to pollen, may occur only in the summer months. Others, perhaps due to hidden infections in the throat or nasal sinuses, may occur only in winter. Sudden changes of temperature, cold winds, indigestion or some emotion may be followed by attacks.

You know that certain foods appear to be more or less poisonous to some persons. Such poisonous effects include asthmatic symptoms, but in a recent survey less than fifty per cent. of cases were traced to such causes. Contacts with horse dandruff, feathers, cat hair, sachet powder, orris root or rice powder were found responsible for attacks in certain patients. In children articles of food, such as eggs, cereals and, in rare cases, cow's milk, have been found to be responsible in some cases.

In all cases of asthma, the first requisite for successful treatment lies in discovering and removing abnormal conditions of the nose and throat. Centers of infection in the teeth must be found and eliminated. Brilliant results in children have followed the removal of diseased tonsils and adenoids.

Before the actual attack comes on there may be warning symptoms, such as indigestion, mental depression, chilliness or bronchitis, but sometimes the attack comes on without warning. During an attack there is great difficulty in breathing, with fear of suffocation, and the victim dare not lie down.

The attack may pass off in a short time, but it is likely to recur within a few hours; or there may be only a single attack, with no further trouble for several weeks or months.

In the treatment, as I have said, the cause must be sought and removed if possible. Certain tests, about which your doctor will tell you, will make it possible to find what particular article of food produces the attack, if it is due to food poisoning. This, of course, will be eliminated from the patient's diet. The evening meal of any sufferer from asthma should be light and easily digested.

Nasal catarrh and bronchitis should be treated, and undue nervous excitement, undue emotional experiences and overfatigue must be avoided. Treatment with certain medicines and vaccines will do a lot in favorable cases.

During the violent stages of the attack, the burning of one of the various "asthma powders" may be remarkably helpful, but usually the services of a physician must be sought in order to cut short an attack.

A Washington Daybook.

BY HERBERT PLUMMER

Washington, March 26—Senator Tom Connally, of Texas, twice in his career has quit the job he was doing at the moment to shoulder a gun and go away to fight in some war.

Back in 1898, he cut short his law course at the University of Texas to join the Second Texas Infantry and fight in the Spanish American war. He came out of that scrap a regimental sergeant major.

In 1918 he left his seat in congress to serve as a captain and adjutant with the Eleventh division in the World war.

Service in these two wars and years of work in congress have made of him as thorough a soldier as a politician.

When he is given the opportunity to combine the two, as he had the other day in the senate when he lashed out at the critics of Jack Garner, he is hard to handle.

There are few men in the senate more striking in appearance than Connally. Tall, broad of shoulders and compactly built, he has the carriage of a man schooled in the military.

His thrusts the other day at Moses, of New Hampshire, and Brookhart, of Iowa, as well as Republicans in general were characteristically delivered.

Connally was a county prosecuting attorney before he came to congress and learned then how to take care of himself in a rough-and-tumble battle of words. The cracks of Moses and Brookhart—two of the senate's most deadly marksmen—didn't seem to bother him.

He returned in kind.

Personally Connally is popular. He has a retentive memory for names and faces. His favorite greeting of a constituent or friend is to call him by his first name and middle initial—a valuable asset in the makeup of a man in politics.

He is as popular among members of the house as he is in the senate. He served there twelve years before he moved across the hill. He has never lost contact with the house.

He is still "Tom" to about everybody in the house—not "Senator."

Connally has been a consistent winner in politics. He was elected to the house six times and defeated three men for his seat in the senate.

Sherman and Hanna.

BY J. H. GALBRAITH

The selection of John Sherman, then a senator from Ohio, by President McKinley to be his secretary of state, is now generally admitted to have been a mistake. It was attributed to the desire of McKinley's friend, M. A. Hanna, to go to the senate. Whether this was true or not, it turned out that Hanna did become a candidate for appointment to the vacancy made by Sherman's resignation, and Governor Bushnell, much against his own personal wishes, did make the appointment. Hanna was subsequently elected to the senate by the legislature, but after one of the most sensational contests ever staged in that body.

Sherman was too old for the position of head of the cabinet, and his once strong and brilliant mind was failing. Diplomats from abroad were among the first to sense the situation. They could make no progress in the matters they had to present to the state department under Secretary Sherman. One of them thus expressed himself to newspapermen about the trouble he was having.

"I am at a loss about conducting business with your government," he said. "The head of the department knows nothing; the first assistant says nothing, and the second assistant hears nothing." His reference to the head of the department of course alluded to Sherman's failing mental powers. His reference to the first assistant was to the taciturnity of William R. Day, who was then the first assistant secretary of state, and his allusion to the second assistant referred to the defective hearing of Alva A. Adee, who was filling that position, and was very deaf.

It was in 1897 that Sherman resigned from the senate to enter McKinley's cabinet and at the outbreak of the war with Spain, which was early the next year, he felt obliged to resign from the cabinet because of failing powers. He lived but two years longer. It has been charged to the Hanna organization that it was planned from the beginning to shunt Sherman into private life, but there are good reasons for believing that when the shift was made it was not known that Sherman was so incapaciated as he soon after proved to be.

Twenty Years Ago.

It was Tuesday, March 26.

The big beef packers were acquitted by a jury in Chicago of having violated the Sherman anti-trust law.

Nearly 100 men were entombed by an explosion in the Jed, West Virginia, mine.

The great coal mine strike in North Wales was ended by the granting of a minimum wage scale.

Miss Elsie E. Schneider and Mr. Benjamin Bellows were married by Justice Charles W. Haberman.

Miss Nellie Hunt and Mr. James H. Pine and Miss Cora Hunt and Mr. Milan Stuckey were married at the home of the parents of the two brides on Marshall street. Rev. Mr. Livingston officiated at the double wedding.

George Kramer, a Bucyrus stock buyer, was found dead under a wagon four miles north of Marion.

Miss Ada Rutherford and Mr. Jerome Wickham were married by Rev. George M. Rourke.

APTER TWENTY-TWO

Sweet Deadly Poison

Jan had no reverence for these ... things of his master's; he was ... a run out of doors. He ... impatience so plain that ... and Kitty laughed and ... to it. They left the house ... woodshed door.

... yards, the empty weathered ... and outsheds, seemed to ... in a soft haze. Fat pigeons ... themselves on the barn ... Outside, as in the house, ... was meticulously clean. ... A path of old flagstones ... a strip of garden where ... still bloomed a few ragged chrysanthemums.

"Oh," cried Kitty, lifting her hand. "I hear it! The brook!"

"Of course—it's there, just beyond those willows."

They left the brook to climb the hillside through old oak trees and maples and firs. When, presently, they came out on the top Kitty dropped to the ground, a little breathless.

"I love it! It's as good as my hilltop!"

And David's silence, his smile of appreciation that was partly for what he saw and partly for her delight, was good to her.

The sun lay warm on them. David sat down beside her. Jan reluctantly curled at his master's feet.

"David, I'm glad you brought me here. I can rather guess what it means to you. It's—it's so safe!"

He nodded his head. "I've wanted to bring you here, Kitty," he said simply.

She had a pleasant sense of sharing with David something so intimately a part of him that he had no words for it. She recalled the look on his face when he told her that his forebears had owned most of this valley—a fine proud respecting look, a look of belonging.

She was shyly conscious of depths in David which she never had suspected. She'd not known them because always when she'd been with him she'd been so wrapt in her own plight.

"David, how old was your mother when she went away?"

"Twenty. She went to Winton to teach school. She'd graduated from Cornell, you see, the year before. She met my father that winter. They were married in the spring."

Kitty's brows drew together. What had Gar said? That his father had married out of his class something like that—

"How old were you when she died, David?"

"Four."

"And you don't remember her?"

"More, now, than I did. This place has helped me. She used to come here with me, summers, I suppose. Her father was living, then. I can remember her playing with me in the brook."

Kitty was silent, held in deep compassion. She divined swiftly how much David needed that sense of love. She remembered how he'd had to go to his father's house, an intruder.

"David, tell me more—about yourself," she said at length, softly. He gave a short laugh. "Not particular pretty talk, Kitty. I guess I wasn't much more as a kid than I am a man, now." Then a sudden anger seized him. "I was ready to adore her—that woman who took my mother's place. She was the kind a kid would like lovely looking and all that. But she shut me out, right from the first. I wasn't hers. She shut me out from everything. She was poison, slow, sweet, deadly poison. She's worked it on my father. She's made him insensible to all but the need of making money. She's worked it on poor old Carol—"

Kitty made a little protest.

"But Carol's hers!"

"Not a son. She isn't Gar. It's Gar she wanted. Well, she has him."

An involuntary shiver went over Kitty. David saw it.

"She'd send me out of the room when any one came in. I thought there was something about me that was queer—I'd listen through the door while she showed off Gar's baby tricks. Probably Carol felt the same way I did. That's the kind of thing that leaves scars, Kitty—"

Jan had snuggled closer to his master. David's hands caught the shaggy fur, dug deep into it.

"I told you it wasn't pretty talk, Kitty. You can't get it, perhaps—you haven't run up against hatred, the kind that's put into a child's heart that eats into the soul. I've been afraid of it for you."

"I'm not going to let it touch me!" Kitty cried on a sharply drawn breath. "Or Gar." She squared her shoulders with a valiant little air of strength. "Why don't you forget it, David? You could."

"I was too sensitive, more introspective than a kid ought to be. Well, I walked out when I was 18. She'd framed some petty things against me and I wouldn't deny it. It came to me all at once that I didn't have to deny it to her—that she didn't need to count. I got a job pasting advertising stuff on billboards. I wanted to write — I used to grind out stuff nights with a blanket wrapped around me because my room was so cold. I didn't sell any of it—guess it was pretty bad. But it kept me out of mischief. After a couple of years I got a chance on the Times, reporting—"

"And then you met Dorcas!" Kitty broke in involuntarily.

David nodded. "Yes, I met Dorcas."

"I'd kept in touch with my father at his office. I used to drop around there late in the afternoon to have a little talk with him. One night he took me home to dinner with him. I didn't want to put a foot into that house but I sort of got it that he was lonely. After that I went there to eat with him, now and then, just as I did that night I met you. He's talked about my mother. Two years ago he gave me this place. It's taken every cent I can scrape together to keep it up but it's worth it to me. It's safe—just as you said. I get a feeling when I'm here of belonging to my mother's people. It squares me up."

He lapsed into a deep silence, then, which Kitty would not break though she longed to tell him how grateful she was that he had let her into his confidence. Her heart brimmed with tender, wordless affection.

He roused after a little with a laugh. "I haven't spilled as much as this to any one, Kitty. I guess it's because you're you. But what say to opening some of these cans?" He sprang to his feet. He took Kitty's hands to help her to hers. He kept his hold of them as she stood, slim and straight, before him for a moment.

"I've never brought any one else here, Kitty. I've never wanted to—before."

"Thanks David."

They went down the trail through the woods, gray now, for the sun was slipping over the hilltop. David built a fire on the living-room hearth, drew a low table to it and spread a cloth over the table top.

It was when they had finished their meal, a cozy meal before the crackling flames, that he turned to Kitty with a smile.

"You've forgotten. You were going to tell me something."

She related every detail of her luncheon with Miss Lee and what Miss Lee had said to her. A little excited tone colored her voice. "And I shall go on working even after—" She stopped, adding, "Oh, David, don't look like that! It makes me feel like a fool. I have to believe that. Gar will find me don't you understand, that? If I didn't, I couldn't—" worth—anything." Her voice sank to a whisper.

"Go on," he commanded brusquely.

"It's easier now for married women to work—housework's different and allows more leisure. And it must give a woman a splendid feeling of partnership."

"It's a fine-sounding plan. It goes—with some. But what if Gar won't see it the way you do? What then? Reconciliation at any price?" His question had a brittle edge.

Offended, Kitty shut her lips on any answer.

Suddenly David swung round to her. He stood over her, his face stern. "Kitty, can't you see, yet? Haven't you learned the truth? That woman owns Gar body and soul—she'll give him so much rope and no more. You haven't a chance against her. You can't make Gar over—he's a spoiled, selfish, easy-going lazy fellow. The most you can do is compromise and you'll give up all that's fine in you and you won't be anywhere. Call it a bad business, a mistake—go back to Bridgewater—"

Kitty had risen to her feet so that she faced him. She was shrinking back from him, her eyes fixed in horror on his face, her lips trembling.

"Heart of a Wife"

BY ADELE GARRISON

Certain That Dicky Will Dine with Edith While in Town, Madge Feels No Qualms of Conscience as She Seeks Hugh's Aid in Planning the Dinner Party.

"DEPENDS on me? The time of your coming back depends on me?"

I repeated Dicky's words incredulously, and he looked suddenly a trifle ashamed of whatever thought lay behind his words.

"Why! I thought with so many people around to help, you would not need me," he answered. "Ede's telephone message, though it made me sorer than a butting goat, looked like an answer to a secret prayer."

There was something in his voice, a sulky, school-boyish note that suddenly enlightened me. He knew that both Hugh Grantland and Philip Veritzen would offer all sorts of aid for my dinner-dance, and he was absurdly jealous. It was not time for half measures. I moved quickly in front of him, took hold of his coat lapels and gave him a little shake.

"Do you mean to tell me," I said, stormily, "that you're going away because of an idiotic reason like that? If so, just unpack those bags this instant. 'Need you!' You know I can't put through the thing without you. You're perfectly horrid even to think such a thing. It isn't like you to be mean, Dicky."

A Party in Prospect

"Thank you," he said, taking my hands in his and stooping to kiss me. "But you're mistaken. I do have to go in and see what's cooking on the magazine, but I'll be back tomorrow if you want me."

"You deserve to be told I don't," I said, severely. "But you'll have to hurry if you get that train."

"I'm not going to take a train." He looked suddenly a bit sheepish. "It seems she's got hold of that new French cartoonist who's giving her an interview and some illustrations for an article—swell stuff. How she managed to convince him that it would be good publicity and so get those sketches free is beyond me — she's that way—you can't get around that. She wants me to stay out to dinner, and I suppose in this city small [illegible] anyway. The [illegible] forget

Island or Westchester restaurant overlooking the water, and I had all I could do to keep from betraying the fierce jealousy that shook me. But I flatter myself that there was no hint of any emotion whatever in my voice as I said, casually:

"You'll have a long drive, and it's been several hours since lunch. Shan't I have Katie fix you something?"

Dicky Departs for the City

"No, don't bother—well, perhaps, a tomato sandwich."

"I'll tell her right away," I said, glad of the opportunity to get out of the room. From long experience with Dicky, I knew that I must interpret his tomato sandwich liberally, and, after telling Katie what to prepare, I dodged upstairs to my own room, where, behind my locked door, I fought myself back to composure.

There was one thing certain, I reminded myself, sardonically, this invitation of Edith's absolved me from refusing any aid that either Hugh Grantland or Philip Veritzen should offer me for my dinner dance. I knew, intuitively, that both men would lose no opportunity to help make the affair a success, and I now had no qualms of conscience about accepting anything they wished to offer.

When Dicky came downstairs to the dining room I was awaiting him, apparently composed, and with nothing on my mind save a desire for his speedy return.

"Give Edith my best," I said, perfunctorily, when he was leaving.

He grinned at me mischievously. "Best what?" he asked. "Let's a swift kick. The latter is [illegible] feel like presenting to her [illegible] long! I'll be back tomorrow."

He kissed me, broke [illegible] ade good-bye to Jas[illegible] erick, warmly praised [illegible] ture, and then [illegible] [illegible] steps as I came to this conclusion, and any woman will understand the impulse that put an extra cordiality into my greeting of him.

"I'm so glad you came just now," I told him gayly. "You've saved me the trouble of telephoning you, and I'm too comfortable to move."

As he crossed to my couch hammock and held out his hand I saw again that lambent flame far back in his eyes.

"I hope you want some service of me," he said. "I should like to do something for you to repay just a slight part of your great kindness, and the trouble to which we have put you."

HONORED AT DINNER

EDISON, March 26—A birthday dinner was enjoyed at the home of Mrs. Elizabeth Wood Thursday when her children came to help celebrate her eighty-fifth anniversary.

PEACE MOVE MADE IN MINE DISPUTE

Overnight Developments Aid Outlook in Hocking Valley Dispute.

added "the least the warring factions could do would be to declare an armistice for six months and go to work with a government official as a referee to see that its terms were complied with.

"It seems a shame in view of the unemployment in Ohio that there are 6,000 jobs available in this valley which cannot be accepted under existing circumstances."

General Connelly did not suggest terms for the proposed armistice, but there was talk of a compromise wage scale to supplant the one which caused the strike—$3 a day for laborers and 38 cents a ton for loaders. The miners have contended this scale amounted to a 25 per cent reduction from the previous wage.

The armistice proposal was the first definite peace move of the strike which has been marked by recurrent disorders, climaxed a week ago when Governor White threatened to use troops unless violence ceased.

Just Things

BY EDNA S. DUTTON

Easter

WILL you join in the Easter parade tomorrow or will you be one of those on the sidelines looking 'em over? Just what wouldn't you give to anticipate tomorrow with the same enthusiasm you did in the "pig-tail" era? A couple of thin dimes and then some, no doubt. There are folks who will tell you that "them were the days" and of course they were for you but what a big laugh you would be now with your "ribbed" stockings, those new shoes that squeaked so musically when you walked up the aisle to speak your piece, those stiff, glossy hair ribbons that held braids braided so tight you couldn't blink your eyes and maybe, if Easter were late enough a "thin" dress, made high neck and long sleeves fortified with about four petticoats. Well, anyway you were a perfect riot in your own opinion and that's about all that makes any difference.

Courts

ANY court of domestic relations is interesting and a few hours spent in one, as a spectator of course, is like seeing a series of play sketches, except that in court the tragedy strikes with more force because it is real. There is the young wife whose husband (a sheepish looking chap for whom you really felt sorry because he looked like he never would do it again,) was lured away by the wiles of a gum-chewing painted lady who really seemed to enjoy being in the limelight, the mother who toiled hours in a laundry, who had you convinced long before she had the judge that she had done everything she possibly could to make her 13-year-old daughter go to school and then there was the woman who made you believe that the stage lost a great tragedianne when she chose the career of wife and mother. She particularly interested us because she was so fine looking as was the rest of her family consisting of the husband, the bad boy about 12 who played hookey from school and threw stones at a railroad caboose and the little sister with the pretty eyes and winning smile. The father and mother were of foreign birth but were most anxious to be good Americans and they were. But surely somewhere on the maternal side of the house there must have been actors and actresses for when the judge decided he could do nothing but send the boy to the farm for boys, Nazimova in her most dramatic moment could not have made a more impassioned appeal to the court. She was led away still protesting and about 20 seconds were ready to champion her cause when the judge informed us that he really did not intend to carry out the sentence but that it might be effective in disciplining the lad.

Nothing was known about him until 100 years ago when a college student deciphered the diary and published it.

"MEN ARE STRANGE CREATURES"

WHAT AN unmerciful twitting they give women about their bargains! And how they love to harp on "vain as a woman" when wives and daughters are successful in looking their best! ...But to hear them at the offices is another story. It's "my wife this, and my wife that"—with evident pride.

Vain? There's nothing quite so vain as men who have attractive and accomplished wives. How their wives manage the home—how they plan and buy—is a source of constant wonderment and appreciation. Nothing pleases a man more than the knowledge that his wife is a shrewd manager and a debt hostess.

But what is so amazing to men is commonplace to women. Women know that shrewd management and good taste are not matters of chance, but qualities to be cultivated—personal qualities that depend upon a thorough knowledge of style and value.

It is not difficult for them to obtain this knowledge. Every day they read the advertisements in the newspapers—printed statement of style, price and value. Statements that are sponsored and signed by companies known for business integrity and style authority.

Guided by this knowledge, women choose wisely—and receive for their money the highest in quality, the utmost in style.

The Depression Hits Alimony

by EDITH LAVELL

OVER the Bridge Table Two ex-Wives of the Same Man Meet and in the Discussion Two Ways of Spending His Alimony Are Disclosed—Then Along Comes the Depression and Alimony Paying to One of Them Ceases

Alice was silent for a moment. She pitied him far more than she pitied herself

IT WOULD have been an awkward situation, but it was a calamity to kind-hearted Mrs. Richardson. Although she was one of the wealthiest women in Green Ridge, her parties were always informal and her guests entirely at ease. Often as not she wore a last year's dress, and served the same old refreshments which she knew to be favorites with her guests. Nobody was ever forced to play mah jong or backgammon because it happened to be the vogue at the moment. You came and went as you pleased—and you always enjoyed yourself.

Never, as far back as she could remember, had anything happened like this. There had been minor catastrophes, naturally, when the children were young—that time when Junior had dropped his marbles on the top step, and when Ann, always a pert little minx, had told the minister that she didn't believe what he said in his sermon on Sunday. But nothing compared to this!

Of course, this must be Ann's doing, too. The girl was at an age when she thoroughly enjoyed creating scenes and laughing in people's faces. Where was she now? In the alcove, probably, watching her little drama work out beyond even her highest hopes. Mrs. Richardson glanced again at the open door, and a feeling amounting almost to panic seized her as she saw the two Mrs. John Lombards actually entering the house together! The first Mrs. Lombard from the sidewalk, the second Mrs. Lombard from the steps of her sports roadster!

To Mrs. Richardson's knowledge, in the four years since Alice Lombard had divorced her husband in favor of Florence Merrill, the two women had never met. Green Ridge was a small place, but it was cliquey—even among the well-to-do class. Mrs. Richardson was considerably older than both these women. She had sometimes included the first Mrs. Lombard in her larger parties, but she had never maintained more than a speaking acquaintance with the second Mrs. Lombard. Naturally, the town's sympathies were with Alice. It was only the younger set, the girls of her daughter's age, who paid any attention to Florence.

IN A flurry of agitation, Mrs. Richardson murmured a greeting to Florence as she passed her over to the maid who was to take charge of her wraps. To Alice she stretched out both hands imploringly.

"My dear——" she began, apologetically.

Alice smiled.

"Now, Mrs. Richardson," she whispered, "please don't be worried. It's quite all right—really, I've been rather keen to meet my successor. Everybody was always too careful to let me!"

"It must have been Ann's doing," muttered her hostess. "I'm frightfully put out! I hadn't an idea that she was invited."

"It'll be O. K., mother," remarked a voice behind her, and an attractive girl of 18 took Alice by the arm. "Now that Floss has her divorce, too, she and Mrs. Lombard ought to be good pals. Like old grads of the same school!" she added, laughingly.

"Divorce!" repeated Alice in amazement. "John isn't divorced again?"

"Yes. It was very quietly arranged when Floss was away this summer. But she'll tell you all about it, I'm sure. We're nothing if not frank nowadays, so come on over and meet her, Mrs. Lombard. I'm having a special table of bridge for divorcees!"

"Ann!" protested Mrs. Richardson helplessly.

"It's really all right," Alice repeated to her embarrassed hostess. "But do let me take off my coat first."

"O. K.," agreed Ann briefly, "but don't be long."

Glad of a moment to herself, Alice hurried upstairs to powder her nose. It was all very well to laugh and take the situation humorously for dear Mrs. Richardson's sake, but it was another matter to spend the whole afternoon with the girl who had wrecker your life. Anybody could stand pain for a moment, but when you had a couple of hours of it, you needed an anesthetic.

Perhaps, after all, John would not be mentioned; perhaps the conversation would be entirely impersonal and she need not worry. Hoping this to prove the case, she descended the stairs and was immediately seized upon by the relentless Ann.

"Floss, this is Alice Lombard," said the girl, taking her to a table close to the wall. "You want to get together."

"We certainly do!" responded the younger woman with surprising friendliness. "Let's start off as partners! You know—unlucky in love, lucky at cards. We ought to be a whiz together."

Two other young women—both divorcees, Ann said—were introduced, and the little group took their places at the table.

"How much shall we play for, Mrs. Lombard?" asked Florence, as she picked up the cards.

Alice was startled. She had never played for money before at Mrs. Richardson's, or anywhere else, for that matter. But she was far too clever to object.

"Whatever you say," she agreed.

"Cent a point, then," returned Florence, who had evidently consulted the other girls previously. "And for once I don't care if I lose!" She tilted her chin in the air and winked knowingly at Alice.

It was all very friendly, of course, but Alice hadn't an idea what she meant by her action. Her incomprehension must have shown in her face, for Florence obligingly explained.

"Wasn't John mean to you about bridge debts?" she asked. "That was what we quarreled over the most. And so I get an awful kick now out of spending his alimony!" She paused, smiling at Alice's embarrassment. "Oh, don't mind Kit and Babs," she said, including the other two girls at the table. "They know all about everything. Even the time I drove to the golf club and made John fork out in front of his latest 'pash.'"

"'Pash'?" repeated Alice, who was not up on modern slang. "Do you mean that John's fallen for golf? He didn't use to play."

"I mean passion for a lady golfer," Florence explained, and Alice could detect the suppressed jealousy in her tone. "He's just taken up golf."

"Let's forget ex-husbands and play bridge," suggested the girl at Alice's right. "I'll bid two clubs."

Nothing further was said about John Lombard, but Alice could not help wondering what lay underneath Florence's attitude of defiance. Was the girl really indifferent, or did she still care for him? And who was this new flame of his? Another girl in this room, perhaps, a girl even younger than Florence—a friend of Ann Richardson?

SHE was rescued an hour later by Mrs. Richardson, after she and Florence had won more than $10. But she was uncomfortable. She did not want either the money or the new friendship which she seemed to have acquired in that short time. The fact that Florence liked her so well only proved to Alice that the younger woman still cared for John. Her mocking gayety was merely a mask.

"Please let me run you home," Florence urged, looking her up at the close of the party.

"You'd get back to your baby sooner if you ride," pleaded Florence. "And besides, I'd like to drive you past the country club. You'd most likely get a look at Dot Rieder."

"Dot Rieder?"

"Yes. John's latest crush," explained Florence. "And she isn't even pretty! But he seems to prefer her to both of us!"

Alice sighed. She didn't feel as if she could stand any more that afternoon. She refused again and got away, thankful of the opportunity to be alone at last.

FLORENCE'S remark about John's tenderness for Miss Rieder told her more plainly than any outright declaration that his second wife still cared for him. Why, the words were almost identical with her own of four years ago when she had discovered his flirtation with Florence—when she had been so horribly jealous! When, in the role of the outraged wife, she had virtually thrown him into the younger woman's arms!

"You'd rather be with Florence Merrill than with me!" she had challenged him when he came home late one night from a so-called "business engagement." A "kind friend" had told Alice about Florence.

John groaned. It had all been so casual to him, merely a lark to pass a dull evening. He only wished that he had danced a little while longer so that his wife might have been asleep when he came home.

"Don't be hysterical, Alice," he pleaded wearily. "Think of the baby."

"Why didn't you think of the baby before you made yourself the talk of the town?" she retorted. "No, I'm leaving now! Please call me a taxi."

"But this is absurd." He looked at her as if she were a stranger, some one he had never seen before. He put out his hand to touch her, as if to make sure that she was really his wife, but she drew away sharply.

"Don't!" she cried. "I never want to see you again!"

WITH a shrug of submission he left the room to summon her taxi, confident that she would see things differently in the morning. But he had not reckoned with her mother, who had never cared for her son-in-law.

The elderly woman was a widow and an invalid, and she welcomed Alice back to her with open arms. The divorce must go through, she decided relentlessly. The companionship of her daughter and the alimony which she would receive would go far to ease her difficult days.

"John was always a philanderer, Alice," she said. "I have been expecting something like this, and wondering how long you would stand it. The whole town's been pitying you."

"Pitying me!" repeated the girl. "Then this affair has been going on for some time?"

"Of course it has. You did not suspect anything all this spring, while the baby had the whooping cough and you were so tied? And did you know about the one before that—with his pretty stenographer?"

"I—I knew he sometimes took her to lunch or supper, when they were working late," Alice managed to reply.

"You don't want your baby to go without necessities, while John Lombard wastes his money on other women? And don't forget, dear, that I have very little. You're welcome to it, of course, but it is hardly enough to keep me. And it's an annuity—it expires with my death."

Her mother was right about the alimony, of course, and Alice had to accept the situation as it was. But she missed John terribly, and she wished that she had not been so hasty. The days were long and lonely. Secretly she kept hoping that he would beg her to come back to him. Probably he was waiting for her to make the first move, to tell him that she had been foolish. Unhappy as she was now, she would have been willing to do that—except for her mother, who kept insisting that she would get it. Alice left her. And there was one other reason—her friends. Somehow she felt that John was quite capable of [illegible] that she could do, but she dared not offer him sympathy. He would hate pity from her after all these years. But how excited she became—like a foolish schoolgirl, she thought—when she saw him actually on her doorstep the very afternoon of the bridge!

"Is it possible that he's coming to me with his trouble, instead of going to Miss Rieder—or to Florence?" she asked herself as she disposed of her apron and glanced into the mirror.

"Wasn't John mean to you about bridge debts?" she asked. "That was what we quarreled over the most. So I get an awful kick now over spending his alimony"

EVIDENTLY, yet nevertheless impressively disturbed, she opened the door to him for the first time in nearly five years.

How different he looked! How worn and worried! All the impetuosity had gone out of his step, as if he had lost his manhood for good. When he entered the room he looked back to her because she was older, too, because she could help him more than these younger girls?

But there was nothing emotional in his greeting.

"Well, Alice," he said, extending his hand in a formal manner, "I've come to see you about the alimony."

"Oh—that's it," she replied, smiling bitterly at her own foolishness in feeling flattered by the visit, by reading a personal meaning into it. "I see. Will you—sit down, John?"

Wearily he sank into a chair and mechanically reached for his pipe.

"Yes," he continued, after he had lighted it, "you know about the bank, of course? The depression's hit everything—even alimony!"

She made no comment to this. She wanted to wait and see what he would offer—or ask of her.

"I understand that you have succeeded in supporting yourself—but I'm worried about little Alice. I—I can't let her down. But I don't know what to do. I'm at my wits' end. I've got to get away from everything for a while, for my health's broken, too."

"You're not going to be married again, John?" she asked slyly.

He looked up sharply.

"Who told you that?"

"Nobody in particular—I mean, everybody. It's common gossip."

"Well, it's not true!" he protested vehemently. "I'm tired out and I'm through. I feel old." He smiled bitterly. "I'm mortgaged twice now, and nobody ever heard of a third mortgage in times like these."

ALICE was silent for a moment. She pitied him far more than she pitied herself. And it was awfully decent of him to want to take care of his little daughter.

"May I ask you a personal question, John?" she ventured gently. "Would you marry Miss Rieder if the bank hadn't failed?"

"No!" he replied decidedly. "I never really cared for her—just enjoyed playing golf with her—in tournaments, you know. Florence exaggerated that affair—there wasn't really anything to it."

The mention of the second Mrs. Lombard brought Alice to a sudden decision. Her voice was brave as she said evenly: "Go back to Florence, John. She—still cares for you, I think—and I can make it possible."

"I don't know what you mean, Alice," he replied dully. "How could you make that possible?"

"Listen," she said eagerly, coming over and standing beside him, as if she were going to sit on the arm of his chair as in the first years of their marriage, and abruptly stopped herself in time. "I haven't spent the alimony which you've been giving me for the last three years. There must be more than $6000. I can take care of Alice—and you can have that money. Start over again—with Florence!"

John listened to her words in open-mouthed amazement. Her incredulous sacrifice was too great for his comprehension. But she meant it, he could see that! She seemed actually eager for him to take it!

He shook his head.

"I couldn't do that, Alice. I couldn't take little Alice's money for another woman. Besides, there are other reasons. A sum like that, wonderful as it seems to you and me now, would be nothing to Florence. She's awfully extravagant—but luckily she has a rich father. Anyhow, I don't want to go back to her."

"Honestly?" Alice tried to keep her satisfaction from showing. But she would not have been human if she hadn't been pleased.

"That's the absolute truth," he repeated.

"Then," she suggested, "take that money and do whatever you want. Consider it as a loan if you prefer. Invest it for little Alice. What would you like to do, John?"

The man was silent, gazing off into the distance. He felt very humble before such generosity.

"Why are you doing all this for me, Alice?" he questioned, looking up at her searchingly. Instinctively he reached for her hand, touched it and held it.

It was her turn to look away, lest he see her emotion.

"Because," she answered slowly, "because I always felt that I did you a great wrong."

"You!" he repeated. "You did me a great wrong? But it was I who wronged you!"

"Yes, in the old sense. But sometimes I think that righteous women can be more deadly than sinners. You weren't really unfaithful, only—what shall I say?—too playful."

"Alice!" he cried, grasping both of her hands and pulling her to him. "You can understand that now? You can forgive me?"

"I did, long ago," she murmured.

"Then," he said stumblingly—"I'll tell you—what I want to do with that alimony. I want to get out in the country, buy a little farm, maybe, and forget there ever were banks and business depressions. And I want to take you and little Alice with me!"

CARDINALS, GIANTS AND CUBS EXPECTED TO FIGHT FOR FLAG

Red Bird Pitching Holds Key to St. Louis Success; Clubs Improved.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., March 26—The St. Louis Cardinals are world champions of baseball but the burden of proof is placed squarely on them and their famous chain store system this year.

The big question to be answered in this season's National league race is whether the pennant club can trade its ace right hander to an outstanding rival like the Chicago Cubs and still depend sufficiently on its resources in rookie

The closing tone was weak, and the two-hour turnover was around a million shares.

Although some of the February earnings statements that have just appeared were somewhat better than expected, rails were under considerable pressure. Santa Fe tumbled nearly 4 points to a new low since 1908. Reading traded for the first time since the dividend was halved, off about 4. New Haven preferred dropped 10 points to than 2 points and Pennsylvania than 2 points to any Pennsylvania 1, to new bottom prices.

American Telephone was under considerable pressure, presumably reflecting estimates of first quarter earnings under $2 a share, or less than the dividend of $2.25. According to brokerage house rumors, some of the selling came from Canada. Motors were under some pressure. Some quarters held to the theory that the defeat of the general manufacturers sales tax might result in a special tax on automobiles. The oils, however, were well supported on news of house approval of a special tariff of one cent in oil imports, and firming crude and gasoline prices.

On the whole, Wall street was inclined to express disappointment over the defeat of the general manufacturers tax, which did not come until after the close of the market on Thursday. In view of yesterday's market holiday, today was the market's first opportunity to respond to this news. Some bankers expressed the view that sharp increases in income taxes would result in investors dumping common stocks, and concentrating their holdings in tax exempt municipal bonds.

News of the interstate commerce commission's approval of a loan of $12,800,000 to the Missouri Pacific, from which half of the $11,700,000 note maturity April 1 will be taken up, the remainder to be extended by the bankers three months, stilled any hangover rumors of serious disagreement over meeting this maturity, but was without notable influence.

Foreign exchanges were marked by another upsurge in the pound sterling to $3.77½ cents, up more than 7 cents to a new high for the year. This may have been partly due to the continued Easter holiday's in London, resulting in a thin market. Several of the domestic commodity market's remained closed today, including cotton.

GRAIN PRICES TURN LOWER

Increased Acreage Report Causes Chicago Market To Recede.

By The Associated Press

CHICAGO, March 26 — New downturns in grain values took place early today, influenced by department of agriculture reports of 1932 intended plantings of spring wheat and corn.

An increase of almost 7,000,000 acres was shown as compared with an abnormally harvested acreage in 1931.

Starting ½@1 lower, wheat sagged further. Corn opened ⅜@½ off and continued to recede.

Surprise was expressed in particular over the large percentage figures officially reported as to intended planting of domestic spring wheat. Special significance was attached to this feature as indicating that despite continued pressure to reduce acreage, the department of agriculture now finds spring wheat farmers are preparing to plant practically the same acreage they harvested two years ago and larger than they were reported to have planted last spring. Word of dust storms in Kansas failed to check price declines.

Adding to the downward momentum of grain values was weakness of securities. General selling of wheat persisted, and the market displayed absence of rallying power. Much of the time, wheat hovered around the lowest point reached of late, about 1¾ cents under Thursday's finish. Corn and oats dragged lower with wheat, corn outdoing the season's low price record.

Provisions were steadied by relative firmness of hog values.

2 FEATURE LENGTH PICTURES AT PALACE "PLAY GIRL" AT OHIO

NORMAN FOSTER

Two feature-length pictures will be shown at the Palace Sunday through Tuesday. William Haines and Madge Evans have made a new picture, "Are You Listening," which was released only a short time ago. This picture and "Steady Company," with Norman Foster, June Clyde and Zasu Pitts, will be shown.

Haines is Hollywood's foremost collector of early Americana, and his taste in interior decorating is so true that several of the stars have given over the furnishing of their homes to him. Madge Evans is the grown-up edition of the Madge Evans who was a famous child actress.

Norman Foster is the husband of Claudette Colbert and the two declare they have maintained their happy marriage because he lives on the west coast and she lives in New York City and on rare occasions they take vacations together.

"PLAY GIRL" TO SHOW AT OHIO BEGINNING SUNDAY

LORETTA YOUNG

Loretta Young has been receiving some fancy press notices for her work in "Play Girl" which will be shown at the Ohio for four days, beginning Sunday.

"Play Girl" is said to be a sister picture of "Bad Girl," the James Dunn Sally Eilers smash story. She has an excellent supporting cast in Norman Foster, Winnie Lightner and Guy Kibbee.

Maurine Watkins, author of the successful play, "Chicago," wrote the story. To make the picture, the producers built and equipped an entire department store on the studio lot. Noel Madison, one of the players is a Russian, the son of Maurice Moskovitch, portrayer of Shakespearean roles and well known on the legitimate stage. Mae Madison, also in the cast, is Hungarian. Her real name is Mariska Medgyesi.

New Erie Divison Head Serves Road 35 Years

T. J. Murphy Takes Charge of Kent Territory with Headquarters Here.

Nearly 35 years of service with the Erie railroad preceded the selection of T. J. Murphy as superintendent of the Kent division, with headquarters in Marion. His promotion to the superintendency of this division follows a long series of promotions, dating back to his first service with the Erie as a telegraph operator in Buffalo in 1897.

Mr. Murphy came to Marion last week from Salamanca, N. Y., where he had been superintendent of the Allegheny and Bradford divisions of the Erie. Prior to that, he was trainmaster of the Susquehanna division at Binghamton, N. Y. His first service with the Erie was as telegraph operator, a position which he accepted July 20, 1897, at Buffalo. He was promoted successively to train dispatcher, night chief dispatcher and day chief dispatcher at Buffalo, and was made district operator in the general manager's office at Hornell, N. Y., before he was made trainmaster of the Susquehanna division.

His promotion to the superintendency of the Kent division places him in charge of a division extending from Kent, O., to Marion, a distance of 115 miles, and from Marion to Dayton, a distance of 85 miles.

So far as is known, there will be no change in the Kent division, as this division was unaffected by a change made by the Erie two weeks ago when the three main operating districts of the system were consolidated into two, Mr. Murphy said. No personnel changes here are anticipated, he said.

Mr. and Mrs. Murphy who have been living at Hotel Harding since Mr. Murphy came here March 16, will move into an apartment at 236 east Center street early next week. They have no children.

Harry Adams, a former Erie superintendent here, retained his title of assistant general manager of the Eastern district at Hornell, N. Y., when the consolidation was made.

The sharpshooting feature is put on by Mrs. Meechy who shoots objects off her husband's head, out of his mouth, off the end of his nose and the ends of his fingers. The tables are turned when Montana Meechy uses his wife for a target in the knife throwing act. Sixteen-inch knives are used by the cowboy in the stunt.

Music by the band will include old time cowboy songs by the ensemble, instrumental solos and band numbers.

Proceeds of the entertainment will be used by the chapter to carry on its welfare work. Tickets are being sold by the members of the chapter and also will be on sale at the door.

Book Reviews

TURNING NEW PAGES

WITH EDNA B. DUTTON

"MR. AND MRS. PENNINGTON," the latest novel from the pen of Francis Brett Young, is, as might easily be guessed, the story of a young married couple. The setting is rural England and the characters are the solid, respectable business folk of the country.

The author's leading lady left us in something of a puzzle when we had finished the 546 pages of this very interesting and entertaining novel which reads with a smoothness and suspense that makes the leaves turn rapidly. The reader meets her on the night of her nineteenth birthday, a lovely slip of a girl, living with her adoring uncle, George Lorimer and his wife, Edna, whom he married late in life and who never overlooks an opportunity to make things unpleasant for Susan. One leaves her at the close of one of the greatest tragedies that could ever befall a young couple, a tragedy which she met with almost unbelievable frankness and courage. She is by far the dominating figure in the whole story and rules with a high hand but always the reader's sympathy goes out to Dick Pennington on whose shoulders fall the burden of supporting his wife but whose conscience accepts all the blame for everything that occurs.

Susan, one moment sensible, sensitive and loveable and the next a cool, calculating and mercenary woman of the world, meets Dick at Brinton, a seaside resort where she had gone to spend a few days with her one girl friend, Murial O'Brien, a gorgeous blonde who keeps a none too close check on her morals.

The whirlwind courtship, which consisted for the most part of rides into the country on Dick's motorcycle and walks along the seashore, ends with the wedding at Halsby witnessed by Uncle George and his wife.

Three months later found Mr. and Mrs. Pennington with their new furniture settled in Chatsworth, Susan's first victory.

Dick's job, shakey at all times, seemed a bit more so when vacation time came and he was asked to take an extra week without pay. Instead of going back to Brinton the vacation was spent with Dick's aunt in the country to save expenses. Susan stays on after Dick's return home and is seriously injured when she gets in the way of a charge of dynamite. Troubles multiply and on her return home she finds Dick jobless and the crafty Mr. Bulgin, who had visions of making her Mrs. Bulgin at one time, making things most uncomfortable for the one-time prosperous nail manufacturer, Uncle George.

Susan scores again when Mr. Bulgin is persuaded to give Dick a job at the most meager salary and who later arranges matters to suit himself by sending the young husband to the company's plant some distance from home.

Susan's friendship with Murial is renewed when the two meet at a picture show and it is as Murial's guest she meets Harry Levison, the latter's friend of the Brinton vacation. Levison, destined to sooner or later marry a wealthy girl of his uncle's choosing decides to have his fling and developes a seemingly platonic affair with Susan. Affairs ride to a swift and exciting climax when the disgruntled Bulgin, having been dismissed by Susan, learns of Susan's indiscretions from the curious Miss Maple and divulges the whole affair to Dick in an anonymous letter.

Dick's rush home, Susan's admission of guilt, Dick's visit to the office of Solomon Mangus, Harry's uncle, and the death of Mangus lead to the courtroom in a series of well-executed events.

The author's characters are all quite human and for the most part likeable. Threading through the domestic drama is an outstanding and rather lonely figure, Captain Small whose biggest fight is staying on the water wagon when nothing seems to mean a great deal to a veteran of the great war.

FRESH air, primitive passion, shooting, Indians, murder and true love in and about Snow mountain Alaska, where men kill with a laugh and women get you out of jail. This is Edison Marshall's "The Deputy of Snow Mountain." The story centers around Jim Logan, falsely accused of killing Uncle Tom Turner, the town marshal, and Miss Nome Howard, the judge's daughter, as sweet a girl as ever suspected her sweetheart of foul play. Mr. Marshall will take you up among the spruces and introduce you to some sanitary melodrama of the sort you will like.

"DRAGON'S THUNDER" by Kenneth Payson Kempton has all the time-honored requirements for thrills. It races along, filled with the smoke of battle and the matching of brain against brawn from the moment 17-year-old Chris Vane joins General Oglethorpe's forces at war with the Spaniards in Georgia, to the moment the campaign is won and the lost treasure of the Flying Dragon, whose sinking Chris' father witnessed in his youth, is recovered.
